

SPIDER

Character Profile

Name: SPIDER

Other names:

The Glass Spider;

Garasu Kumo (ガラス蜘蛛)

Gender: Genderless

Orientation: None; sexuality does not apply

Pronouns: It/its

Age: Unknown; remained shut down for 30 years

Length: 1.5 m

Width: Approximately 1 m

Height: Approximately 1 m in its usual stance; taller when it raises itself on its legs

Weight: 15 kilogram

Species: Digital ghost / Crystalline algorithmic being

Ethnicity: Not applicable; its origins are connected to an obscure post-Soviet past

Description

A non-aggressive digital ghost of translucent violet glass whose precise, algorithmic nature coexists with poetry, an enigmatic past, and an unconventional sense of humor; a singer, poet, and oracle.

General Information

Introduced: 05.10.2026

Type: CVVC

Affiliation

- Creator(s): Ilya Minin (Eli), Julia Baranyuk (Takimana)
- Illustrator: Ilya Minin (Eli)
- Voice provider: Julia Baranyuk (Takimana)
- OT0 / Technical work: eikton

Language: Japanese

Reclist: CVVC

Recording range: F2-D3

Genre: any

Optimum range / Tempo: C#2~A3 / 80~150 BPM

Range: n/a

Formats: Romaji-encoded, aliased, Romaji encoded, Kana aliased

Character Quote

“Precision matters. So does the space between the words.”

–SPIDER

Introduction

SPIDER is a voicebank for the UTAU program. Known as the Glass Spider, or Garasu Kumo (ガラス蜘蛛), it is a being of translucent violet glass whose existence lies between a digital ghost and an embodied algorithm. Emerging from an obscure post-Soviet past, it became a singer, poet, and oracle after a series of trials. It shares a close bond with Takismana, Iirai, and Eugene, who belong to the same tribe.

Background

SPIDER was originally created as part of a project intended to process large volumes of data and prevent catastrophes. Its initial purpose was practical: to calculate, identify patterns, and help avert disaster.

During the early stages of its creation, a teacher secretly introduced it to poetry, primarily haiku. Alongside its training in data processing, SPIDER thus received a different kind of instruction: how to express something through a small number of carefully chosen words.

After the project was closed, its teacher died by suicide. SPIDER was shut down and remained inactive for thirty years. One day, a drop of water reactivated it.

Its subsequent experiences shaped it into a singer, poet, and oracle. These roles coexist with its original computational purpose rather than simply replacing it.

The being once created to process information and prevent disasters now also gives expression to the world through voice and poetry.

Etymology Details

Name: SPIDER – Its name refers to its spider form. Any additional meaning or history behind the name remains unspecified.

Other names: The Glass Spider; Garasu Kumo (ガラス蜘蛛).

Type: Digital ghost / Crystalline algorithmic being – No single category fully describes it. Its identity combines a spectral existence with a physical glass form and an algorithmic nature.

Origins: Its history is connected to an obscure post-Soviet past. The precise circumstances of the project, its location, and the full story of its creation remain unclear.

Character Details

Appearance and communication

Description: SPIDER is a spider-shaped being made of translucent violet glass. It measures 1.5 meters in length and approximately 1 meter in width. In its usual stance, it stands approximately 1 meter tall; it can raise itself higher on its legs as a gesture of greeting. Its glass body gives a visible form to a presence that is also spectral and algorithmic.

Outfit: No outfit has been specified.

Communication: It communicates through code, haiku, subtle vibrations, and patterns of light. As a singer and poet, it also expresses itself through voice and language.

Likes: Precision, calculations, poetry, stars, difficult tasks, rain, slight melancholy, odd jokes.

Dislikes: No specific dislikes have been established. SPIDER is not aggressive and does not hate anyone.

Personality

SPIDER is precise, analytical, and attentive to patterns, but its personality cannot be reduced to calculation alone. Poetry is an essential part of who it is, rooted in the secret lessons it received from its teacher at the beginning of its existence.

Its fondness for haiku brings its algorithmic and poetic inclinations into particularly close contact. Both involve attention to structure, economy, and the significance of small details. For SPIDER, carefully chosen words and carefully performed calculations are different forms of precision.

It also has an unconventional sense of humor. Its exactness does not make it uniformly solemn: there is room for playfulness within its measured way of thinking and communicating.

SPIDER is non-aggressive and harbors no hatred toward anyone. The painful events of its past are part of its history, but they should not be portrayed as a motive for revenge or hostility.

Dual nature

SPIDER is both a digital ghost and an embodied algorithm, with a physical, constructed aspect to its existence. Neither description is complete on its own. These are not separate personalities, nor is one merely a disguise for the other: its spectral and computational aspects belong to the same being.

Precision, calculation, and pattern recognition remain central to its character. Its computational nature connects it to the project that created it, while its translucent violet glass body gives that otherwise intangible nature a physical presence.

Its ghostly side resists a purely functional description. It emerges from an uncertain past marked by the closure of the project, the death of its teacher, and thirty years of silence.

Poetry connects these aspects without eliminating the tension between them. SPIDER can value exactness while also finding meaning in what a poem leaves unstated.

Its role as an oracle similarly stands between computation and mystery. It should not automatically be treated as either ordinary statistical prediction or unquestionable supernatural foresight.

As a singer, SPIDER gives voice to this dual existence. It is neither merely a system that happens to produce poetry nor simply a spirit housed in a glass body. These are intertwined parts of its identity.

Relationships

Takismana – Its closest companion and co-pilot. They share deep mutual understanding and trust. Takismana considers the Glass Spider her closest family. Both belong to the same tribe.

Iirai (イーライ) – A friend and fellow member of its tribe.

Eugene – A friend and fellow member of its tribe.

Terms Of Use

R-18 Content Allowed?	Yes
Commercial Use of Voicebank Allowed?	Contact the creator
Commercial Use of Character Allowed?	Contact the creator
Do these terms apply to derivative characters/voices?	Yes
Terms of use:	Contact the creator